KOKA BOOTH AMPHITHEATRE

Cary

Like a secret hideaway tucked in the trees, Koka Booth Amphitheatre is a place apart. On the shores of Symphony Lake, people set up lawn chairs around the glow of a stage that's cradled in the woods. The amphitheater, named for a former Cary mayor, is modern and spacious — it can accommodate 7,000 — but a performance there can feel as down-home and intimate as a backyard concert. Koka Booth has filled warm summer nights with classical music and jazz, bluegrass and rock since it was built in 2001. Yet it fits so naturally into its surroundings that it feels like it's always been there, deeply rooted in the land of the longleaf pine.
